MAGIC CHEF

... Let's Go

By LARRY MACARAY

A few years ago in Valsequillo, Mexico, they dug up a piece of bone that is reported to be 30,000 years old—it was in the desert area where preservation of nature's creations is easier than in damp climate.

The bone was part of the pelvis of an Ice Elephant—and although bones such as these aren't dug up every day throughout the world—it was still just a bone. What made this an exceptional find was the fact that drawings of animals were scratched on it. We all know that elephants don't go around carving drawings on family bones—so there must have been humans around to do the carving. To put it another way, there were "artists" here on the North American continent at the same time (generally speaking) that men were carving in the caves of Lascaux in central France.

THESE CAVE MEN or whatever name we do give these early people, were not world-beaters, artistically speaking, and no really new ideas about prehistoric man emerged out of this finding. Their work was to a great extent similar to the cave paintings of France and the cave paintings of Altamira in Spain—but somewhat cruder. What a thought—even 30,000 years ago (give or take a few thousand years) the American artists were trailing behind the Europeans in the arts. Luckily—for want of a better word—we have finally come up to, and surpassed the art of Europe. Even most Americans won't agree with this—but our Abstract Expressionists have taught the world a new bag of tricks when it comes to paintings. The rest of the globe now concedes that New York has replaced Paris as the world art center—but even now—the "popularity" of the American Abstract Expressionists is waning—and it's about time. Certainly, some new ideas have been developed but so many "hangers-on" of mediocre quality have gotten into the act that it has become ridiculous. CAVE PAINTING is a fascinating subject—imagine that these men had the job of painting magic symbols on the walls of the caves, probably for ceremonial reasons. No doubt this man had a special duty—no hunting for food or fighting—just carving or painting images. I called my old friend Meriton Hinshaw, the genial director of the Bower's Memorial Museum in Santa Ana. I remember that he had been called in to identify some old bones in Costa Mesa when a new subdivision was being made. He informed me that the bones were fossils—no scratchings on them. His assistant, Paul Chase, is an authority on these prehistoric carvings and he explained to me that here in Southern California they have found exquisite designs on bird bones—mostly geometrical designs incised on the bones. The most popular designs that the early carvers used were Zig-Zags, diamond shapes, and ladders—and as closely as he could determine—they were carved by the early ancestors of the California Mission Indians—probably around 1,500 years ago.

Proposition 14 Subject Of Television Program

"The Most Controversial Issue," Proposition 14 on the November ballot, will be explored Sunday at 2:30 p.m. on KNXT, Channel 2, as part of the Political Primer series presented by CBS-KNXT in association with the League of Women Voters. Passage of Proposition 14 would amend the California constitution to nullify major anti-discrimination provisions of state housing laws, and would forbid local governments and the state from passing such laws in the future, unless authorized by another constitutional amendment. Maury Green of KNXT News, will serve as moderator. Speaking in support of the measure will be two attorneys who are members of the Committee for Yes on Proposition 14. They are Miss Evely Whitlow of Los Angeles and Wendell Reid of Van Nuys. Presenting arguments for a "No" vote on this proposition will be Mrs. David Post, a vice president of the California League, and Mrs. Uri Berman, a member of the Speakers Bureau of the Los Angeles League. The California League of Women Voters is actively opposing Proposition 14.
